

Enrique Steiger M.D.

Dr. Enrique Steiger, born on February 23, 1965, in Switzerland, is a renowned plastic and reconstructive surgeon with extensive experience in both medical practice and humanitarian missions. He holds a medical degree from the University of Zurich and is board-certified in general surgery, traumatology, and plastic and reconstructive surgery.

In addition to his clinical work as the Medical Director and co-owner of Clinic Utoquai AG in Zurich, specializing in plastic, reconstructive surgery, dermatology, health, and nutrition, Dr. Steiger is actively involved in various humanitarian initiatives. He is the President and Founder of the Swisscross Foundation, which focuses on humanitarian healthcare projects in conflict zones, particularly in providing education, infrastructure, and logistics.

Dr. Steiger serves on multiple boards and committees, including the International Humanitarian City in Dubai, the Global Health Institute at the American University of Beirut, and the Swiss Institute of International Studies at the University of Zurich. He also holds teaching positions at the University of Zurich and has been involved in academic research, with numerous publications and presentations to his credit.

Throughout his career, Dr. Steiger has participated in numerous humanitarian missions with organizations such as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the United Nations, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE). He has provided medical assistance in conflict zones, including Namibia, Angola, Western Sahara, Rwanda, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Syria, Mali, Niger, and Lebanon, among others.

Dr. Steiger's commitment to humanitarian work has earned him recognition and awards, including the Church Air Prize in 2003 for his courage. He continues to balance his medical practice with his dedication to providing medical care and support in some of the world's most challenging environments.
